

Elephants will use their tusks and trunks to dig watering holes when a water source runs out. This not only helps them, but the entire ecosystem. African Elephants also help disperse seeds across vast areas. They will eat fruits or other plants, digest what they can, and then drop the seeds many kilometers away from their original location. This, in turn, gives more food for the ecosystem to eat.

